In 1941, the anti-Fascist activists Ernesto Rossi and Altiero Spinelli, placed under house arrest on the Italian island of Ventotene, draw up a manifesto for a free and united Europe.

The Ventotene Manifesto, whose full title is “For a Free and United Europe.

A draft manifesto”, was drawn up by Altiero Spinelli and by Ernesto Rossi (who wrote the first part of the third chapter) in 1941 when they were both interned on the island of Ventotene.

After being distributed in mimeographed form, a clandestine edition of the Manifesto appeared in Rome in January 1944.

The present text was edited by the Società Anonima Poligrafica Italiana and presented by the Edizioni del Movimento Italiano per la Federazione Europea (i.e. Publications of the Italian Movement for the European Federation).

This edition is based on the 1944 edition which Spinelli stated was “the authentic and precise text”.

1^a edizione del Manifesto di Ventotene scritto nell'agosto 1941.
(Roma - 29 agosto 1943)

The road to pursue is neither easy nor certain,
but it must be followed and it will be done

UMBERTO ECO: PROUST E L'IDENTITÀ EUROPEA

VIDEO <https://geapolis.eu/il-polilinguismo-come-destino-delleuropa-per-ricordare-umberto-eco/>

Can the variety of languages be an obstacle to the true unification of Europe?

Having multiple languages is not a real obstacle. The solution will be the gradual spread of a kind of multilingualism that does not mean speaking many languages fluently. There will be a widespread multilingualism: everyone will be able to speak and understand a little of other languages.

A French friend of mine, Claude Hagège, speaks of multilingualism as Europe's destiny. What is one of the driving forces to achieve this? Erasmus! The program has two functions: a linguistic one and a sexual one. Most young people who go on Erasmus end up marrying abroad. This means that within thirty years a bilingual generation will emerge.

EUROPEAN CONVENTION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

WEB <https://www.echr.coe.int/european-convention-on-human-rights>

The European Convention on Human Rights, was opened for signature in Rome on 4 November 1950 and came into force on 3 September 1953. It was the first instrument to give effect to certain of the rights stated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and make them binding.

Under the original system, three institutions were responsible for enforcing the obligations undertaken by the Contracting States: the European Commission of Human Rights, the European Court of Human Rights and the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe.

Since its adoption in 1950 the Convention has been amended a number of times and supplemented with many rights in addition to those set forth in the original text.

- dignity
- freedom
- equality
- solidarity
- citizens' rights
- justice

ONLINE ETYMOLOGY DICTIONARY

It is often forgotten that (dictionaries)
are artificial repositories, put together well after the languages they define.
The roots of language are irrational
and of a magical nature.

Jorge Luis Borges,
Prologue to “El otro, el mismo.”

Etymologies are not definitions;
they are explanations of what words meant 600 or 2,000 years ago.
These are histories of words only, not things or ideas. The modern word for something might have replaced old, forgotten words for the same object or concept.
The original core of print sources in 2001
was the Oxford English Dictionary
(second edition, 1989), the Barnhart
Dictionary of Etymology (1988), Weekley’s
“Etymological Dictionary of Modern English”
(1921), and Ernest Klein’s “Comprehensive Etymological Dictionary of the English Language” (1971).
The PIE in it was from Calvert Watkins (“American Heritage Dictionary of Indo-European Roots,” 2nd ed., 2000).
